FOREWORD

IN PREPARING THIS, THE EIGHTEENTH VOLUME OF THE JAMBALAYA, it has been our aim to make it even better than the best of the past. We have tried to make it different; to make it more interesting than ever; to present a picture of our life here at Tulane. Our work has been difficult and our trials and disappointments many, but if we have accomplished our aim, we shall be truly thankful and feel well repaid. However, if we have failed of our purpose, be lenient in your criticism, we have done our best. The Editors.

The History of the Tulane University of Louisiana

ULANE UNIVERSITY looks back for its beginning to the Medical College of Louisiana, which was organized in 1834 and chartered in the spring of 1835. It issued its first degree in March, 1836, the first degrees in Medicine or Science ever issued in Louisiana. Tulane University, as it stands to-day represents the contract, giving to the Tulane

Administrators perpetual control of the University of Louisiana, which the men, to whom Paul Tulane entrusted his donations, entered into with the State of Louisiana. In the opening of his letter to the Administrators, dated Princeton, May 2, 1882, he writes: "A resident of New Orleans for many years of my active life, having formed many friendships and associations dear to me, and deeply sympathizing with its people in whatever misfortunes or disasters may have befallen them, as well as being sincerely desirous of contributing to their moral and intellectual welfare, I do hereby express to you my intention by an act of donation inter vivos all the real estate I own and am possessed of in said city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, for the promotion and encouragement of intellectual, moral and industrial education among the white young persons in the city of New Orleans, state of Louisiana, and for the advancement of learning and letters, the arts and sciences therein" Mr. Tulane's first gift amounted in value to $363,000, and subsequent donations raised the total value of the real estate donated to $1,050,000, with an annual rental of $75,000. The results of other donations since the time of Mr. Tulane's generosity have been the Richardson Memorial Building, the Josephine Hutchinson Memorial Building, the F. W. Tilton Memorial Library, the endowment of the chair of Botany by Mrs. Ida A. Richardson, the donor of the fund with which the present Richardson Memorial Building was erected, and, very recently, the establishment of the Department of Tropical Medicine, Hygiene and Preventative Medicine by means of a donation of $25,000 by the United Fruit Company, and the erection of a new engineering building, the Stanley Thomas Hall, made possible by a bequest of $60,000 by Stanley Thomas.

The H. Sophie Newcomb Memorial College was the result of a donation of $100,000 in October, 1886, by Mrs. Josephine Louise Newcomb to the Tulane Administrators for the establishment of a memorial of her only daughter. Newcomb College has since been the recipient of a bequest of F. Walker Calleander of $65,000.

Under Article 320 of the Constitution of 1879, the Legislature of the State recognized the three departments—Law, Medical and Academic—of the University and granted $10,000 annually until 1884, when the Administrators of the Tulane Educational Fund assumed the financial obligation of the state. During the course of three decades subsequent to 1884, the Tulane University of Louisiana has reached its present proportions, when it comprises the Graduate Department, the College of Arts and Sciences, the College of Technology, the Teachers' College, the H. Sophie Newcomb Memorial College for Young Women, the Law Department, the Departments of Medicine, Pharmacy and Dentistry, and the Post-Graduate Medical Department. The University is also the possessor of a stadium and capacious grandstand, built with funds donated largely by the New Orleans Progressive Union, and of a large and thoroughly modern gymnasium. As we review the steady progress of Tulane University, we feel that Mr. Tulane's wish, as expressed in the close of his letter has been granted. His letter ended: "With devout gratitude to our Heavenly Father for enabling us to form these plans, and invoking His divine blessings upon you (the Tulane Administrators) and your counsels."

Academic Senior Class History

T last, gentle reader, we have reached that crucial moment, that moment, so temptingly suggestive to the class historian of figurative launchings on metaphorical seas. With what eloquence could we tell of the treacherous shoals which threatened the frail bark on its maiden voyage! But, it must not be. With the passing of the valedictorian, such things have left Tulane forever.

Let us turn then, to the past so full of happy memories, to the past, which years hence, hardened with the professional cares, hardened by the struggle for life, we shall remember fondly, nay reverently. The strain of some instrument, the sight of an old familiar face, the dog-eared book and the flood gate of memory is opened, the scenes of more youthful days pass in solemn procession before us. Perhaps at some far-off day, yet undreamed of, some loyal member of the good old class of 1913, taking up by chance this volume, may read this and a host of old memories will arise. He will think of that Tank Fight, in which we triumphed, the last real one at Tulane, and of that gentle push-ball game, in which we were not so successful; then of our success on the gird-iron over the sufficient "Sophs," in the cheerful, verdent freshman days; or perhaps of some forensic laurels or perchance of the fair one or ones in whose gentle sympathy made arduous study possible or otherwise—there, we draw the curtain.

And now, reluctantly, mournfully, we must perform the saddest rite of all, we must break the dearest ties, we must bid farewell to Alma Mater. Though we leave thee Tulane, yet we shall ever keep thy beloved memory fresh in our heart's most sacred tabernacle. Good-bye, Tulane, we pledge thee in a stirrup-cup, brimming over with love, loyalty and tears of regret.

Junior Class History

FELLOWS, don't you remember the year, when we were called Freshmen, and the next year when we were vainglorious Sophomores? There isn't any use writing about old times, but think for a moment how those past years were crowded with work and play, joy and sorrow.

We may laugh at the green-capped Freshman, and we may have a healthy desire to inflict bodily punishment on the boastful Sophomores, yet we were once like that, and didn't realize it! Let tolerance to the Freshmen and pity for the Sophomores be our watchwords!

Great Caesar! What a change this year! Where are those gay dogs who never opened a textbook, but rolled along merrily? (Although somewhat unsteadily) Gone. Gone. Requiescant in pace, so to speak. And all that is left of us—left of—I forget just how many—are we as carefree and joyous as is days of yore? Not so Theophilus! We tread the straight and narrow path between bookshelves and laboratory tables, our faces filled with gloom, our books filled with notes, and our reports filled with D's.

Such is the gay life of the Junior classman. Yes, those Fatima advertisements and Clothing ads are certainly deceptive. Not that I seek to condemn such advertisements, but if you will believe me, the subjects of those aforementioned decorations are either Freshmen, Sophomores, or Seniors. Some day someone is going to write a monumental work on the studious habits of the Juniors. It will be a great work. It will be appreciated. We should be vindicated before the world.

Of course, we are not all students in the same degree. At one extreme we have a choice assortment of the very best little bluffers that ever fooled a trusting professor. At the other extreme we find the grinds, who increase the income of John D. Between these extremes are the average students or middlemen, the only middlemen that don't take a rise out of the ultimate consumer. And unto the end I maintain that the Juniors who bluff have to bluff harder, the Juniors who grind have to grind harder, and the average Junior has to work harder than the members of any other class in college.

Has the Historian a grouch that he thus "pessimizes?" No! He only would emphasize that a Junior's "life is not all cocktails and turkey-trotting," as Sammy Weller would have said had he lived in 1913.

Onward, then, to the Senior Class, brave Juniors! There shall we find rest and surcease from our labors, for who has ever seen a Senior work?

This is not a history—as I suppose you have already observed—but who cares for cold dry facts? Everybody knows that we are the best class the College ever had; intellectually supreme, athletically preeminent. Why say more about it?

Fifteen for 1914, fellows. All together! One—two—three! HISTORIAN.

Sophomore Class History

Y THEIR WORKS ye shall know them." Yes, the class of '15 heartily welcomes any such test of their merits, be it applied to them as a group or as the fond fosterer of individuals who have compelled the recognition of their associates. Arriving at Tulane in a period of rapid rise in university standards, athletic prominence, and college spirit we threw ourselves into a new life with an intense enthusiasm here bubbling out in a boyish freak when we dangled above the heads of an unsuspecting theatre crowd, a shirt fantastically painted with a big '15, there settling into the dignified earnestness that made possible our unprecedented success in debate. Easily susceptible to the maturing influence of college life we assumed the university idols of integrity and self-reliance with a determination to make them ours. The manner in which we chose our class officers and five candidates for the honors of the previous year was markedly free from the partisan littleness of petty personalities, a vice which school orators tell us has been somewhat in evidence here. Under such favorable auspices, honors for "'15" and the Varsity have gone arm in arm in every field of athletic endeavor, our literateurs selected to high positions and our class leaders become university leaders.

As Freshmen we obtained a complete monopoly over all transportation via Audubon Park waterways and then issued passes with an easy hospitality to all members of the class "'14." Our goal tossers in the face of superior weight added two more consecutive victories to our list. As the crowning triumph of the year we defeated the Sophomore debating team—the first time the Freshmen debators have ever defeated the Sophomores—at Tulane.

As Sophomores we have taken the lead in a movement to have the entire body of upper classmen initiate the incoming Freshmen, thus arousing the new men's respect of the University instead of class antagonism. The Faculty abolished the interclass fights. But the general class of upperclassmen will enforce the "Freshmen Regulations." There will still be sufficient Freshmen-Sophomores contest to generate ample class spirit. At the time the Jambalaya goes to press we have won three out of three such contests.

So be it. Our victories, like those of the men before us, may be forgotten tomorrow, but the ideals that made them possible will long exercise an irredescent influence upon the life and the affairs of Tulane and thence upon the world. "Surely not all in vain."

Freshman Class History

WHICH is more important, a class meeting or a fire? This was one of the first questions that came before the class of 1916, and the promptness with which it was decided to finish the business of the meeting before going to the fire was an indication of the thoroughness and conscientiousness of 1916. Matriculation Day came. The fearful massing of forces upon the levee of the mighty Mississippi, and the stealthy advance on Tulane under the able leadership of Captain Brown, and Committeemen Fortier, Michinard, and Fenno, threw such consternation into Sophomore ranks that no attempt at initiation was made. Even if the Sophs did take off Skeet's pants, immediate retribution was visited upon them.

Soon after Opening Day, September 30, officers had been elected, and the class was running smoothly. The Sophomores (such kind-hearted young gentlemen you know), with a view of giving the new men a closer acquaintance with New Orleans real estate, both liquid and solid, dragged 1916 through the lake, and threw some of her champions upon the ground in the wrestling. The Freshmen knew that it was not their part to resist too strenuously, for they wanted to know even the ground upon which Tulane stands, so that their loyalty to her might be increased. The football game was a close affair, and in the basketball, when 1916 knew that the Tulane spirit had come to her through the kindnesses mentioned above, she decisively defeated the Sophomores in two straight games. In other words, "it aint nothin" if the Sophs were victorious at first. Freshmen were conspicuous at every college gathering, they outnumbered other classes at football games, they developed college spirit to a higher degree than it had ever been at Tulane. In debating, in declamation, in football, in basketball, in all classes of college endeavor, there are members of 1916 that have surpassed the whole University. Notice these things, and consider what a great class has come among you.

The regulations imposed by the student body were cheerfully accepted, and the little green caps soon became a mark of honor because of 1916's achievements.

Such brilliancy in class work as the Freshmen instituted had never been seen. Many new Latin constructions have been discovered, many new and wonderful interpretations put on the works of the foremost American writers. Tell me, gentle reader, can these attainments be surpassed?

So let us hope that the class of 1916, encouraged by the worthy sister class of Newcomb, may close its career at Tulane with its brilliant record in college spirit, athletics, and studies undimmed.

A Senior's Plea

Ring that bell Viola, Viola ring that bell!
Oh! bring me back, Viola, to heaven after—
I'm in the jaws of death now,
I'm just about to go,
Oh! just to scream and just to yell,
Viola, won't you ring that bell?

Ring that bell Viola, Viola ring that bell!
Ring that bell, Viola, ring that bell!
I've said all there is to say—there's nothing more to tell.
She's asking me a question now
And I don't know a thing,
She'll fuss and fume and pout—oh! well
Viola, won't you ring that bell?

Ring that bell Viola, Viola ring that bell!
My brain's in such a muddle—everything's pell mell.
She's after me again now
It's worse each time you know,
She rages—my! the shot and shell,
Viola, won't you ring that bell?

Ring that bell Viola, Viola ring that bell!
This is a time of woe—my marks, oh! well they fell.
From B to D they went quite fast
And now they're lower still,
My cap and gown I'll have to sell,
Viola, won't you ring that bell?

—B. D., '13.

Senior Class History

I shall not follow out in this the usual method employed by class historians, and enumerate the glorious achievements of the class of 1913, for our achievements have not been glorious, nor are those of any other class, so far as I have been able to learn. Surely athletic supremacy, dramatic talent, and a moderate amount of facility in contributing to college publications, do not constitute glory in the opinion of a person who thinks, and all college people should think. If any of us achieve any glory, it will be in the future.

Before we were Freshmen, we looked upon college as an ultimate goal toward which we must strive. When we became Freshmen, we regarded the attainment of a cap and gown very much as we had formerly regarded college. Now that we are Seniors, our college course must have been a sad failure indeed, if we do not realize that there is no ultimate goal in this world. And that is, of all thoughts, the most inspiring—to know that our possibilities for development are without limits.

Assuredly college has been a great and potent factor in our development. If college has served one of its greatest purposes, it has taught us to be broad-minded, to look at things from the other person's point of view, and above all to try and "see ourselves as others see us." If we have learned to stand "behind the scenes and watch ourselves playing our roles in life without weeping," we may indeed count that an achievement.

But there is something that we have gained not only by going to college, but to Newcomb College, I am speaking of Newcomb's Faculty. It may be that other colleges have faculties just as wonderful, I do not know, having never tried, but I do know that no other college has a Faculty more wonderful than Newcomb's. Our English, our Chemistry, our Language courses have meant, not merely the acquiring of a minute portion of knowledge of those subjects, but the inestimable opportunity for getting acquainted with characters who are exceedingly worth while.

And so, besides countless individual gains we have made, it is to be hoped that as a class our history has meant not the acquiring of merely external things, but that we have learned where our goal really is! that we have learned to look upon ourselves fairly, and even humorously; that we have gained the most possible from the cultivation of friendship with those of the Faculty and students from whom we could gain the most; and that all of our lessons have made us believe that we

"Fall to rise, are baffled to fight better, Sleep to wake."

Senior Class Poem

The Seniors recalled the days of their youth
The steps by which they reached their present age,
The thoughtful, endless search for truth
The cap and gown, the symbol of Senior heritage.
Some recounted three years of toil and strife
Some, the awakening of talents that had dormant lain

Some, the careful fitting of self for life
All reckoned the labor past as thrice three years of gain.
But now, O Newcomb mater, mayest thou
Who leadest us on through the night
With thy spirit and higher ideals endow
Us, that we too may shine by thy light.

—Senior Poet.

Neath our banner of crimson and black	For it bears the stamp of approval
We Juniors are working true,	Set on it by Newcomb fair,
To prove our right to receive	The seal of our Alma Mater,
The gown of the bronze and blue.	Which guards her treasures rare.

'Twill mean the nineteen fourteen
In honor and happiness, too,
Has passed from the ranks of the Juniors
To wear the bronze and blue.

Sophomore Class History

OW many years do you suppose people have been writing class history? How many class histories do you think you have read? Very few, I'll bet you. And why? Because every class historian has attempted to convince you that her class is the best, most wonderful class that has ever entered Newcomb! I am not here to tell you that; I am not going to tell you—and the reason is because you know it already.

I shall not place '15 in the catagory with any other class, for as our most erudite cousin of the Duke of Argyle would say: "the parallel between the present day institutions and those of the past is not appreciated by some young ladies." So also I fear some readers of this might not appreciate the parallel between '15 and classes of the past. It is fortunate that we have some learned members to represent us in Latin and Debating Clubs, for we might be thought extremely frivolous by those who did not know us. Mr. Socola fairly beams on our dramatic personnel; haven't we the best little soubrette in the college? And the Juniors have been heard to remark on the basketball field: "those Sophomores are developing." And isn't it the conceded opinion that there never was such a hair-raising, side-breaking, nerve-splitting party as the initiation of '16 by '15! If you could have seen a much beribboned, beruffled, pale-face Freshman grasping wildly in the dark, slide as nicely as you please down a plank whose sliding friction was greatly diminished! And oh! the joys of the aeroplane!

We Sophomores are brimming over with the sense of duty and moral obligation. Very rarely do you find one of us cutting classes—at least things went so far that an anti-cut league was organized by one of our most enterprising members. However, I do not think that that most portly young lady received more than one fine, not because the girls stopped cutting, but because no one would pay. It was not a success.

If you, reader, are a fair-minded person and are not prejudiced against the writer of this or any one of us, you readily see what a class we are. We always see the funny side of everything, just as we see the funny side of the history question, but our motto is: Geaudeamus igitur.

Freshman Class Poem

It was a morning last September
(We entered college then)
When nineteen sixteen was born
With members five times ten.

We might have been quite fresh indeed
We might have been quite green,
But now we are the finest class
No matter what we've been.

The Sophomore "hazing party" was
By us made a success,
For if we had not been so nice
It would have been a mess.

We married then the Junior class
Our banner was the ring,
From minister to butler,
They ne'er forgot a thing!

In basketball we're pretty good
Our first game will prove this;
We're pretty good in studies too
We Freshmen rarely miss!

We went to Tulane to the game
That our brothers played;
Although it rained a little bit
We saw each play they made.

So Freshmen all, lift up your heads,
Be proud of this your class,
Be sure and go to everything,
And study hard and pass!

History of the School of Education

WID you ever stop to think of it?—what would become of Newcomb if it were not for the School of Education—but do not think, the very thought would be terrible.

During the few years of our existence, we have grown remarkably in number, and this year has been the most successful of any of the previous ones. The School of Education is now represented by four classes of the college, and it is due to the co-operative work of these classes that we have become such a strong body. Each student helps her fellow-student, and especially is this true of the higher classes. They take fond care of the Freshmen, helping them over many of the difficulties which they all encounter during the first few months.

Not only is the School of Education represented by the four college classes, but also by three distinct schools: the regular School of Education, the School of Household Economy and the Kindergarten Department. Each and every one of us have an aim and are working for a purpose. The close relationship between the students and the teachers has been a notable fact, which has resulted in the student's ambition to excel in their studies.

Still we find time to enter into the college activities. This year our basketball team is able to meet any team in the college, and we believe that we will be the victors. We are strong in debating, whether formally or simply "standing up" for one of our Educational Courses. We proved ourselves successful hostesses, when the officers gave a delightful party to the students and Faculty.

But why say more—everyone knows our virtues. Let us hope that some day the Faculty and the students of the Arts and Science Department of Newcomb will acknowledge this.

Senior Class History

IN October, 1910, thirty-eight eager and ambitious students made their debut into this renowned institution of legal training. This small body had as its members not only youths just laying the corner-stone of their future career, but also men of matured age, upon whose faces were imprinted traces of struggles traversed in early life. To insure the undertaking a success, youth and matured age joined hand in hand and began the study of law harmoniously.

While the class of 1913 has cast itself into the study of law with seriousness and with unremitting ardor, still instances of merriment intervened. The shaving of Muhphy's mustache brings forth fond recollections. To carry out the act, a clandestine meeting was held, in which specially designated students agreed to furnish the implements of torture (soap and razor). Murphy yielded to an overwhelming throng of fellow-students, and with malice aforethought, the "cruel" razor did its duty.

How well we remember the rainy morning when Veith boasted of having traversed flooded streets without getting his feet wet. Was it possible that his rubber boots could withstand the water? An experiment was resolved upon. The boots, hidden in a dark corner of the "bull pen" were filled with ice water. Not until Veith again put on his boots did he become aware of the presence of the water—and then he narrowly escaped an attack of pneumonia.

The inauguration ceremonies of Fred Veith, as President of the Senior Class, were attended with much jollification. Witty jokes and stories were indulged in and refreshments were served in abundance. The following toast is memorable of the occasion:

Here's to the President of our class—Fred Veith,
To whose health we all drink with delight;
May he ever have happiness and pleasures in life,
And may he soon be captivated by a lovely wife.

After three years of training under skilled and eminent professors, the class of 1913 is now prepared to take its part in life's affairs. Of the thirty-eight students who entered in 1910, twenty-two survive and are candidates for graduation. This is the reward of three years of incessant and untiring effort. To the Faculty is due a debt of gratitude for our success thus far attained.

Henceforth will trials be held not in moot courts, but in courts of legislative creation; political speeches will be delivered, not on the table in the "bull pen," but on platforms before large audiences. Enough have we dealt with the technical fee tail and fee simple—we will now deal with the "practical fees."

Conversation of Two Freshmen, as Heard by a Sophomore

HE two Freshmen were calmly seated on the Arcade steps awaiting the 11:30 bell. They were worried—Freshmen always are—for they had a math quiz next hour. To beguile the torturing minutes they began swapping jokes, and a Soph, on her way to Latin, heard these choice remarks:

“And he said and he said and—”

“Who said?” interrupted the other.

“Why Noah said, if you don’t let me alone, little boy, I’ll get my whale to eat you!”

A shout from the Soph prevented further discussion, and the Freshmen walked off to math with an injured air, and one said, “Now I wonder what was the matter with her?”

Senior Class History

FN fully discharging the duty of Historian of the Senior Medical Class, the writer feels it necessary to state that for diverse reasons, many of which are obvious, it will be impossible to chronicle more than in a general way the biograpy of our life at Tulane these past four years. Many details are omitted, some through choice, others of necessity and what is here represented is simply a tabulation of the greater things, concerning our life cycle as a class, a schematic record of our successes and our failures; our days of sunshine and our days of rain.

It was on October 1, 1909 that the Medical Department first opened its portals to receive as vigorous and promising an aggregation of Embryonic young Medicine-men as ever invaded a Temple of Aesculapius, or held with trembling misgivings the handle af a scalpel for the first time. It has been endorsed by those competent to express an opinion, that it was a red letter day in the history of the University, when this ardent delegation, born of a desire to alleviate human suffering and thirsty for medical knowledge completed the preliminary ceremonies of registration, and passed into the domicile of learning to delve into and understand themselves the coveted secrets and unfolding wonders of the healing art and its allied branches.

Now that we are about to attain the goal, let it be known that the plowing has been hard and the ground tough, but from the Freshman seeds, sown four long years ago, with careful nursing and on a pabulum, prepared and concocted by our superiors, there has developed by gradual and consistent growth an adult plant, soon to blossom forth in all its glory, to spread its usefulness and influence in the interests of humanity, upon communities throughout the country. But as is the fate of most crops, not all the seeds sown have sprouted, some few have left behind, those who succumbed at one stage or another to the ravages of inanition, who failed to assimilate sufficient of their medical diet and who dropped by the wayside without fulfilling the first law of nature—self-preservation. We herewith note their loss with regret. Fortunately for us, however, many transplants from other hot-houses of learning have been added to our number, who have thrived in their new envioronment and have aided materially in making this so succssful a harvest.

Our Freshman year, as so many Freshman years, was influenced by the mingled elements of youthful enthusiasm, some serious work and a small degree of misapplied initiative. This last, small as it was, caused quite a little trouble and anxiety, but to recount these errors of our childhood, would be to exhume and postmortem incidents long buried and we are satisfied to let them rest in peace. The promise of becoming some day worthy followers of medicine, made itself felt even in this first year, our performances of the manifold duties imposed on us and the diligence with which we accepted the studies of the hour, brought forth commendable expression from our instructors, whose satisfaction, we record as sufficient evidence of our worth as prospective physicians. The athletic field, too, received many men from our number, whose superior university spirit prompted them, even in the face of a crowded curriculum, to don football togs and baseball uniforms and uphold in this, as in other phases of university life, the unsullied name of Tulane. May it be said to our credit, that we have continued throughout these four years to contribute to the athletic squads of the University and have furnished in more than one instance, captains, managers and administrators in athletic activities.

The second chapter of our history finds us somewhat advanced on the road to maturity with enthusiastic youth changed to conservative thought and misguided initiative directed into more appropriate and rational channels. There was much to be mastered in this Sophomore year, complicated subjects and intricate problems which only strong minds could grasp satisfactorily, and when the end of the session witnessed these obstacles overcome, it brought smiles to the most sombre of our professors, who proclaimed us far in advance of our years.

This opening of the third chapter of our biography presented many features strange to us at first, the wards, clinics and operating rooms of the hospitals, being a bit unfamiliar, but it was not long ere we had acclimated ourselves to our new surroundings and in masterly and professional fashion handled the cases allotted to our care with dexterity and with results. We accumulated much learning in this year, stored it away to be summoned at will, so that final examination held out no difficulties to us, and by unanimous vote, we were granted permits to wander farther into the realms of the healing art, with all the rights, honors and privileges connected with maturity.

With the onward march of time the last mile-stone of this four season's race is reached, with due form and dignity we take our seats to imbibe the last lessons of our undergraduate career. By constant application, we have become quite efficient in the art of diagnosis and treatment and well drilled on the principles of laboratory technique. We feel that we have accomplished much; we feel that we have put up a fund of available material to be called upon when needed; and we feel that we are ready to pass into the column of alumni and start out on the walk of life we have chosen. It is our sincere hope that when we depart from these halls, we will have left behind an indelible impression, towards which future classes will aspire to imitate.

On leaving Tulane, we wish to acknowledge our obligation to the entire teaching staff for the many courtesies we have received at their hands and for their willingness and patience to assist us at all times and whenever called on. We wish also to express our thanks to our librarian, Miss Rogers, for the many times she has gone out of her way to make our burdens lighter and our tasks easier.

We go forth, realizing fully the responsibilities of our position, with the highest conception of the obligation we have assumed in the interest of our fellowman and we will endeavor always to maintain for the noblest of professions the same degree of stability and recognition which it has enjoyed for so many years.

WALDEMAR R. METZ, Historian.

Junior Class History

Now becomes my duty to set forth, in blazing glory, a few of the highest and noblest characteristics of the class of 1914.

As Freshmen and Sophomores, our achievements will ever shine brightly, for we have naught but a joyful memory of deeds well done. Never before has a class taken more interest in the profession which has been chosen life's great work. We have ever lent our ears to the most learned preceptors who are endeavoring to lead us to a correct understanding of scientific principles; while at the same time we have learned to think for ourselves and do our duty with unfaltering courage.

Surely no other class has excelled us in college spirit! We are harmoniously united and every opportunity of manifesting a spirit of loyalty to the University is grasped by each and every member. We believe in the broader life which combines the intellectual with the social and all that is good and true; and we recognize no creed nor clan that serves in a narrow field of activity. We have given representatives to all the varsity athletic teams, to clubs for the maintenance of college spirit, to fraternities, to various social organizations and, in fact, everything which has to do with the advancement of college life.

Each year we have been strengthened in quantity as well as in quality by the advent of several new members. Still a few others, for various reasons, have left our ranks. Among these the loss of Mr. Charles K. Townsend, President-Elect, who is serving an internship at Shreveport, (La.) Charity Hospital, is felt to no small degree.

Mr. Rossner E. Graham, Vice President-Elect, was unanimously elected by the class to fill the vacancy caused by Mr. Townsend's absence.

It is not within the province of my power of expression to do justice to all the best qualities which this loyal band of good fellows possess. It may suffice to add that we believe in deeds; not idle talk and that "Actions speak louder than words." It is enough for us to ever stand for lofty ideals and a keen sense of duty; always working on the principle that the value of anything is not the value to itself, or in itself, but its value to someone else.

We shall strive to "Gain knowledge, expose superstition and fight meanness," and when we have realized that we have been a stimulus to the spirit which tends to the advancement of the medical world, to the upbuilding of our Alma Mater, and to the betterment of our fellowmen, then, indeed, shall our golden dream of success be fully realized.

Sophomore Class History

NCE more the class of 1915 is called upon to relate her past history. Our history really begun when we entered the Freshman class. Little did we realize then the extensiveness of the field we were entering.

After toiling through the first year successfully we ended the year by electing the following for the next year's offices: President, M. C. Garner; Vice President, H. V. Sims; Secretary and Treasurer, P. Y. Donald.

We departed for home to spend a pleasant and much needed vacation and try to forget our troubles. After a very short but pleasant vacation, which seemed but a dream, we again returned to our work with renewed energy and a determination to accomplish great things.

Figuring up the loss and gain of our class we find that we have lost but four men, and, on the other hand, have gained twelve new men. We are glad to welcome them into our ranks.

We have accomplished some things this year that will ever be remembered by our professors and will be cherished by the succeeding generations.

The evolution of man (Mann) was brought about through our wonderful work. He has been transformed from the much feared man (Mann) of last year to the most popular professor in the Faculty.

We have in our class men of real talent. Our chorus ranks second to none and would be an honor to any body of men. No one realizes and appreciates this better than Dr. Hardesty. The public is invited to attend our rehearsals given just opposite the doctor's office.

We are now in the midst of the age of the "Ologies," in which a mighty and desperate battle is being fought to conquer the pathological conditions and obtain valuable proliferative knowledge, we realize that the struggle is going to be long and filled with many hardships, but our forces are strong and we hope to issue forth as true conquerers in 1915.

The Medical Gang.

CLASS HISTORY: We haven't any.

GENERAL REMARKS ("also class").

AFTER a careful search through the archives, the historian of this bunch has failed to find the record of any previous Freshman class to compare with ours. Though but on the threshold of medical careers we have already added to chemical knowledge by discovering "dilute water" on the face of the earth, and we are so industrious that we carry our study of osteology even to the stadium during baseball practice. And recently one of our beloved professors complimented us on our lack of technique, pointing out to us that Canal Street is the boundry between technique and slip-shod methods of studying human anatomy.

CLASS MORAL.

To keep Dr. "Bull" from using soap and the "Georgia Cracker" from absorbing organic matter with charcoal.

N. B. Dr. "Butch" visited the laboratory the other day and was warmly welcomed after a protracted absence.

New Newcomb

When Newcomb is up on the campus and all of the buildings are new,
And the "dorms" are supplied with screened windows, not to mention a bath-room or two,
Monday dinner is quite free from goat meat, and breakfast from "left-over" hash,
And the needful process of bathing does not compel them to clash.
And no one will cut gym classes, there'll be no gym classes to cut,
Philosophy too, they'll abolish, and teachers won't fall in a rut
Of talking and quizzing and punning and putting their students to sleep,
But the fruit of these ideal conditions our far off descendants will reap.
For those who are not yet existing will "Greater Newcomb" attend,
Our daughters—no, maybe their daughters, their way to this college will wend.
The classes of Nineteen and Fifty and classes of Fifty Two
Will be but Juniors and Freshmen when "Greater Newcomb" comes true.

Medical Class of 1917

E are banded together, a class of earnest students, eager with desire to learn, and fathom the depths of the mysteries of life.

Learned men whose names will live until the end of time, have left us as a heritage, priceless books, from which we can obtain the knowledge necessary for our profession. And what a noble profession it is, to allay the sufferings of the human body, to give comfort where once was pain.

We have before us, five years of earnest study, unlimited research and numberless experiences, and it is for us to show that metal of which we are made, by making the most of this splendid opportunity.

We must work—and win. Let the class of “1917” add honors to our already famous University—Tulane.

"The force of his own merit makes his own way."

IT was in the early fall of 1910 that an earnest and energetic band of students gathered for their initial step into the ranks of a profession, destined to prove to the world that its importance to mankind is second to none. Full of eagerness and high expectations, we toiled along through three years of scientific work and study, in a desire to equip ourselves efficiently for the battle of life. With a fixedness of purpose as to the object and designs to be attained, we have studied and learned everything from the beginning to the end.

Though our presence may not create any new and wonderful intellectual center, we hope that we have absorbed enough to be of untold value and benefit to humanity.

Taking a broad view of the mighty world of today, with its endless activities and a retrospective and philosophical glance into the records of our noble profession, we cannot help but feel that our appearance into its ranks has been most opportune; for, having toiled through hundreds of years of hardship and slow progress it has at last, with one mighty bound, reached that eminent position for which it was destined.

Unheralded by the fanfare of trumpets, we take our places quietly and modestly in the ranks of a profession which has given to the world a host of deep thinkers and eminent scientific men, some of whom have conferred upon humanity munificent and invaluable gifts of theoretical and practical benefit.

Our class is composed of a body of students of lofty ambitions. Our object throughout our course was not to equip ourselves that we might win personal fame, but that some day we may reflect credit and honor upon our profession and our Alma Mater. Fully realizing the duty we owe to mankind, we have sought to equip ourselves that we might be of most benefit to them. Feeling that we could learn but an infinitesimal part of the vast amount of science and knowledge that our profession holds, we have tried to apply ourselves so that we would become experienced in those parts most essential to the welfare of humanity. With this idea and purpose in view, we cannot help but allow our thoughts to see through the prophetic vision of destiny—that our future will be one of worthy accomplishments.

We are now compelled to allow our thoughts to drift back to the good old days spent at fair Tulane. But, alas! As friends we part—with the cherished hope that some day we may meet again. The word lingers on our lips, "Farewell."

To Pierce

When our college days
And dear student ways
Have become quite a thing of the past,
When memory is cold
Our hearts still will hold
A picture that always will last.

The picture portrays
Someone gentle in ways
And never inclined to be fierce,
But kindly he was
To all who had cause
To fall under the reign of dear Pierce.

His many quaint traits,
As legend relates,
Were source of amusement and chuckles;
He climbed rounds of chairs,
And stroked his few hairs,
And played with his fingers and knuckles.

He would sit at his classes
And charm all the lasses
By his interesting waste-basket habit;
He would cram his feet in it,
Then at the next minute
Stoop over and eagerly grab it.

At poetry reading
The pathos all heeding
He sometimes brought tears to our eyes;
But when 'twas amusing
His comic peripusing
To much helpless laughter gave rise.

To any sad maid
Who needed his aid
He gave it without hesitation.
And his kindly ways
Will always have praise
As long as fair Newcomb's duration.

At Newcomb

A girl came to Newcomb, so I've been told,
Her age it was red and her hair it was old;
She dressed in the style and combed in a Psyche,
And she flirted with boys with all of her might.
By her classes she skipped, for all of them,
To dance and to flirt was what she adored,
Till on the bulletin the exams, it appears,
This girl looked at with big eyes in her fears,
And when at the papers on the questions she'd stare
She simply sank through with dismay with her chair.
A tale to this moral this is, I unfold,
Don't cut class, but study and do as you're told,
And at the end of four years there will be
With your name a cap, on your head a degree.

Evolution

Of all the courses at Newcomb,
The one that appeals most to me,
Is taught by John Angus Mason,
The prof. of U. S. History.

He wanders around and around
Or sits on his stage in state,
And dictates outline after outline
O, I tell you, the course it is great.

He expounds his pet theories at length,
We calmly look on and admire.
Some nod, others sleep—a few listen,
Rave on, fair one! He never will tire.

"Educate the electorate, or
The nation can never succeed.
More political courses in college
Is America's great crying need.

The party system to-day
Projuices control of the bosses.
The people rejuiced of their rights,
Are all asleep to their losses.

'Tis the duty of college women
Throughout this broad land of ours,
To use all their influence for right,
To work and exert all their powers."

I like it, I like it, John Angus,
Though e'en you are talking till yet.
You've changed all my ideas, John Angus,
And now I'm a suffragette!

—M. F., 14.

On the evening of December 7th, 1909, the Master Masons of the student body and professors of the various departments of the University, met in the Scottish Rite Cathedral in response to a call of Brother A. L. Metz, to organize a Masonic Club. Brother Metz stated the object and purpose of the call, and acted as Chairman until the permanent student organization was perfected.

The Most Worshipful Grand Lodge of Free and Accepted Masons was made cognizant of our aims and purposes, and we respectfully petitioned this Ancient and honorable body for its approval. This was granted, making us the only students' Masonic Club in the United States that has received recognition from a Grand Jurisdiction.

We have had the pleasure of having with us this year, some of the most learned Masons in the country, who have lectured to us. We will have others before the end of the year. Our meetings are well attended, and it has been our pleasure to give aid to worthy and deserving students in the University.

The objects and purposes of our organization has appealed to many of the Alumni of the University who are Masons. We are continually growing, and it is our plan to erect upon the University campus, a dormitory and meeting house, to be known as the Tulane University Masonic Club House.

The Forum was organized in 1900 by Dr. Alderman, President of the University, to "create a wider interest in Oratory and Debating at Tulane." The society has not only trained more Varsity debaters than similar organizations combined, but has carried off the scalp of her rival in 9 of the 13 annual debates.

Le Cercle Francais

THE French circle of 1912-13 has been marked by an exceptionally accretion of young and new members who possess the invaluable quality of sticking. With this infusion of new blood, new energy has been instilled in the society; thus the circle is being enabled to carry out its foremost aim, that of spreading the knowledge of French literature, of increasing the ability of Tulane students to converse in French, and, especially, of serving and helping the young and inexperienced men.

The attendance at meetings has been highly satisfactory, programmes have been diversified and well rendered. The discourses, recitations, extemporaneous talks, and debates held by the circle serve as an index of the variety and vitality which are marking this year's work. A play is being rehearsed by the circle; this indicates the degree of interest felt by the members and the measure of their undertakings.

Our genial director, Dr. Fortier, has inspired new and old men alike with his enthusiasm. The members are prosecuting their activities with a vigor that has obtained and will continue to obtain results.

The 1912 Football Season

ULANE opened her 1912 football season with four games of an almost entirely preliminary character, scoring four successive victories. Of these the most important was that over Southwestern Industrial. In the face of sombre predictions as to the outcome of the struggle a score of 95 to 0 was piled up. A direct result of these games was a lengthy hospital list that at times assumed very considerable and alarming proportions. There was probably not a team in the South that had to face as tough a run of hard luck in the shape of injuries to first string men as had Tulane. The preliminary games put a handicap on the team that was felt all season.

The first two hard games were in a peculiar way typical of the entire season. In the Alabama game, Tulane was scored on early in the second quarter, then got down to work and at no time after that was Alabama within striking distance. In the Mississippi A. and M. game the middle of the second quarter saw the score standing 17 to 0 against Tulane. The second half opened with the score 17 to 7. When the middle of the last period was reached the Aggies led by 24 to 7. With six minutes left to play Tulane rallied with surprising spirit and by dint of the hardest kind of scrapping slipped over three touchdowns in rapid succession, bringing the score to 27 to 24 in favor of the Olive and Blue.

These last few minutes of play witnessed probably the gamest exhibition ever put up by a Tulane team. The final effort made required that kind of bull-dog spirit that will stay in the fight, taking the severest punishment until the very end and stay there fighting all the time on the aggressive. It is that kind of spirit, the proper spirit of scrap, that marks, and, in fact, makes the successful team. And it is precisely that spirit that was not developed to the full extent of its possibilities in the 1912 squad. That it was there in a latent state was evidenced by at least two games, that it was not developed was evidenced in a most glaring manner by the L. S. U. game. The right fighting spirit showed itself and the team played great ball against Alabama and Mississippi A. and M. In this, these two games were peculiarly typical of the entire season, sometimes listless, but at other times fairly charged with all the vim and pep that could be desired.

The game with Texas A. and M. was not in any way important. All eyes were focused on the preparations for the final on Thanksgiving.

The L. S. U. game was a disappointment, not only because Tulane lost by a much larger score than even L. S. U's most sanguine well-wishers dared hope for, but also because the standard of football displayed was by no means what was to be expected, decidedly not the kind that should mark the big game of the year. Outweighed fifteen pounds to the man, Tulane put up a game scrap and her light back field, averaging considerably less than 150, accomplished wonders. Yet the Tigers won and Tulane does not intend to attempt to minimize the glory of their victory.

The 1912 season showed Tulane again master of the forward pass. For two successive seasons Tulane has developed this department of the game to a stage bordering on perfection. A pass from half or quarter to end both over center and towards the sidelines was worked with extraordinary success, considering its simplicity.

The schedule for 1913 is probably the best that has been arranged in many years. The Varsity will have a season that will test its fighting ability to the utmost, but one that can be successfully gone through by a team imbued with the proper spirit of scrap. There is every indication that the 1913 Varsity will be such a team. We have the right spirit here at Tulane. When the student body carried their defeated team from the field on their shoulders after the Alabama game they showed that they fully realized the true meaning of real loyalty to old Tulane. They are ready to stay with the team to the very end fighting a losing game. The team is ready to give all that it has in it, to fight back until the last whistle blows. With the combining of these elements of true loyalty, will there not be next fall at Tulane an irresistible spirit, a spirit that will accomplish for Tulane more than lies within the power of any other means?

MCLEOD, CAPTAIN—Left Tackle—Old Mack finished his fourth year of football at Tulane with the same brilliantly consistent play that has marked his past services for the Olive and Blue. He has always led the way when it came to getting into the game from the start and putting the team on the aggressive.

MAIHLES, "BUTCHER PETE"—Sub Guard—Pete has been getting there right along and is booked for a star role next fall. He is big and strong and has the proper spirit of scrap, which will take him a long way.

WOODWARD, C., "THE BIG SWEDE"—Right Tackle—The "Swede" turned out to be a sure enough star, not only with that most accurate toe of his, but also with line work of the first order. And there are three more years ahead of him! All Southern——.

SCHWARTZ, "IKEY"—Right End—He was all there. They would try his end once or twice and then quit, a hopeless job. "Steady Consistency," thy name is "Ikey" Schwartz.

GARRETT, BROOKS—Center—Brooks sacrificed a lot for Tulane. When shifted from his regular position at end to that of center, he showed that he had the right stuff in him and played a splendid game in his new position, passing with deadly accuracy.

MULLER, "BEANS"—Right Half—Freddie is a speed merchant all right and the way he gets those knees up is a caution. Tulane loses a hard working halfback when Muller graduates this year.

GUYTON, "MISSISSIPPI"—Left Guard—Tom showed that he was a hard man for any opponent to handle. His faithful work during the entire season was the kind that helps make a successful team.

WOODWARD, "SHINER BILL"—Right Half—"Shiner" is some guy when it comes to hanging on to a forward pass. He puts the right amount of ginger into his play and is a bear with the stiff arm.

MARKS, SUMTER—Quarterback—Old Sumter's middle name is Forward Pass. His short passes to the ends or halves have paved the way for many touchdowns for Tulane. On the defense he is a sure tackler and he always galloped back from 10 to 30 yards on punts. His steadiness and consistent fighting made him of untold value to the team. He is Captain of the 1913 team.

SMITH, "OLD MAN"—Left End—Baker, as a receiver of the forward pass was a bright particular star. He had the knack of getting where the ball was going and then "hiked out" when he got his "hooks" into the shiny rock. They do come back.

KIRN, "FROGGIE"—Sub Center—"Froggie" decided that he could make his "T" in football and by hard and consistent work got out and turned the trick.

ARRENDELL, "BUCK"—Fullback—Built like a brick wall. Cad has a way of ploughing through the line that is good to see. He is a hard man to stop and by no means a soft spot to land on.

(307)

HOPKINS, "HOPPY"—Fullback and Line—Old "Hoppy" with his powerful build makes an excellent line plunger. He has the ability to get up speed enough to hit the line hard and keep going without losing his balance.

BLACK, "CUPID"—Guard—"He's a bad man! He likes to bite off a guy's ear." When "Cupid's" ire is aroused he certainly gets to going some. Just try him.

HEARD, "MINK"—Quarter—"Mink" holds the record for touchdowns scored in one game. It was his judgment at quarter that won the Mississippi A. & M. game. He was probably faster than any other quarter that opposed him during the entire season.

GEORGE, "FROSH"—Left Half—For a light man he is a wonder. He has a better drive in hitting the line than any other backfield man, is about the fastest man on the team and one of the gamest, has an excellent spiral on his punts and is a sure tackler. His work in the L. S. U. game was of the highest order.

Basketball, 1913

BEFORE the 1913 basketball season opened, Tulane's chances for turning out a winning five were greatly doubted. Such opinions and press notices as the following were common—"Of the many inter-collegiate contests, Tulane is weakest in basketball and in building up a squad for the following years lies the only hope of retrieving herself."

This attitude on the part of the students and the press was only natural, however, for during the preceeding year basketball had been entirely dropped from the calendar of inter-collegiate sports and there was not a "T" basketball man remaining at Tulane. The completion of the gymnasium supplied the long felt want of a good basketball floor, and Coach Mason decided to round out a team, merely as an experiment.

An inter-department series was arranged to bring out likely candidates and an excellent schedule was arranged for the 'Varsity, although as intimated above, there was slight hope that Tulane's showing would be brilliant. A squad was selected finally and began hard practice under the watchful eyes of Coaches Mason and Hoffman. The men were all new to college basketball but had had more or less experience under the A. A. U. rules, which was rather a detriment than an advantage.

The season opened with two games with Louisiana College. Tulane won the first but lost the second. The showing was not brilliant, but at least, satisfactory, and the addition of two men to the team after these games further strengthened Tulane. The team had by this time been finally selected and consisted of Glass, Cowles, forwards; Vandever, center; Barnett and Woodward, guards; Marston, forward; Maihles, guard; Gilliam, sub-center; Nice, sub-guard.

In the following games Mississippi College went down to defeat by enormous scores in two contests. Louisiana State University was defeated two straight at the Tulane Gym., and this superb showing delighted the coaches and called forth the praises of the whole student body. In these four games the team had worked like a machine, passing accurately, moving speedily and shooting the goals surely.

It was therefore, that the team invaded Tiger territory with confidence, and in the two games that followed, won the first, after a hard struggle, by one point, and lost the second after an equally hard struggle by a single point. The winning of this one game at Baton Rouge meant a victory over L. S. U. of three games to one and gave Tulane the State Championship.

Thus out of eight scheduled games, Tulane was victorious in six, a wonderful record for a first year team, lacking experience as well as weight. Every man on the team deserves great praise, for every man aided materially in each victory.

Glass showed speed and accuracy, his foul goal throwing meaning the game in more than one instance. Cowles was always steady and a sure point-getter. At center Vandever was able to outjump every opposing center, while his basket throwing was excellent. Woodward and Barnett worked well together at guard and formed a strong defense, both fighting hard from whistle to whistle. Martin's long shots aided the team on several occasions, while Maible's guarding was first-class.

We believe that this team has made history at Tulane, and that basketball will now be a permanent sport at the university. Never had Tulane been so successful before, even with an older and more experienced team. Next year and for several years to come this team will remain intact, and we may look forward to an even more perfect basketball machine, which will not only annex the Louisiana Championship, but make a strong bid for the title of "Basketball Champions of the South."

Baseball Season, 1912

THE baseball season of 1912 was far from a success. Starting off with five men from the 1911 team and with an abundance of promising new material on hand, prospects for a successful season were very flattering. But there were difficulties ahead. Many of the most promising men were unable to report for practice on account of having too much work, among them the captain of the team. Rainy weather cut the practice season short by several weeks and the first game found our team still "in the rough," and throughout the season we never "hit our stride." True, there were flashes here and there of real baseball and sometimes stellar work, but it was never with any degree of consistency. Our infield and outfield was a well-balanced "bunch" and our hurlers had everything—but control. This we blame on our unfavorable training season, but that doesn't make our record look any better, so we'll just have to look upon our 1912 season as one of "hard luck," which we will improve in the future.

AS THEY HAPPENED.

Tulane 4, Louisiana College 5;

Tulane 10, Louisiana College 1.

Our first game of the season was a defeat by a close score at the hands of the Louisiana College team in Alexandria. This was enough to dampen any team's hopes, but a dance that night in honor of our team brought back courage and strength, and the next day we came right back at them and smothered them by a score of 10 to 1.

Tulane 3, Louisiana Industrial Institute 5;

Tulane 5, Louisiana Industrial Institute 5.

Next we journeyed on to Ruston for two games. The first we lost 5 to 3, and the best we could get in the second was a tie, score 5 to 5. Our team played fine ball in both contests, but the "breaks" were against us. L. I. I. had a very fast team of "amateurs."

Tulane 5, Louisiana State 1;

Tulane 3, Louisiana State 6.

Our next games were at home with "our dear old chums" Louisiana State. Just to show how much we liked them, we "trimmed" them by a score of 5 to 1. "Old Nigger" was at his best in this game and the "Tigers" never had a chance. The next day was one of those dark gloomy days and our hurler couldn't see the plate, consequently we lost by a score of 6 to 3 in a very hotly contested game.

Tulane 3, University of Texas 12.

Texas came next for two games. The first day, rain prevented the game, and the second day they made enough runs for two games, "trimming" us 12 to 3. Like a "suffragette parade," the game was full of mistakes—on Tulane's part. Lost the plate again.

Tulane 3, U. S. S. Nebraska 2.

Our next game was with the fast team of sailors from the battleship Nebraska, and just to show that we could "come back," we won by a score of 3 to 2.

Tulane 3, Louisiana State 5;

Tulane 6, Louisiana State 9.

The last games of the season were a return series with the "Tigers" on their home ground. Rain the first day forced us to play a double-header and we drew the small end of the score in both contests. The first game was close and snappy, but the second was ragged and featured by heavy hitting and errors. It was a fitting climax to an unsucces-

Track Season, 1912

FOREWORD

HE Track Team of 1912 was the most successful ever turned out at Tulane. Contesting in four meets, the Olive and Blue won three of them and came second in the fourth. A brief review of the season follows:

TULANE VS. MISS. A. & M.

In this dual meet, held on April 20th, Tulane won a decisive victory by scoring 62 points to her opponent's 45. Despite the rain and hail that fell during the meet, every event was hotly contested, and it was only by quick work that we won the relay race.

SEVENTEENTH ANNUAL S. I. A. A. MEET.

This, the most important athletic meet held south of the Potomac, took place in Tulane Stadium on May 18th. All the important Southern colleges had teams entered, so it was no small achievement for Tulane to get second place with a score of 29 points. It was only by winning the relay, which counted 10 points, that Vanderbilt won the meet.

Vanderbilt	36
Tulane	29

TULANE VS. L. S. U.

On the day this meet was scheduled in Baton Rouge, the encroachments of the Father Waters rendered railway communication impossible. As our athletes could not hike to the Capitol City and compete on the same day, they regretfully hied them homeward.

JUNIOR S. A. A. U. MEET.

Surprising the local athletic clubs, Tulane won this meet after spirited competition, scoring 42 points to the 35 of the next team, Broadway Gym. This meet was held on May 31st, after college closed, but we had a full team in, and they brought home the bacon.

SENIOR S. A. A. U. MEET.

On June 1st, the Olive and Blue won this meet with 43 points, eight more than the Y. M. G. C. scored. By virtue of winning this and the Junior meet, Tulane won the A. A. U Championship of the South in track for 1912. Werlein hung up a new record in the high jump, and Commagere in the hammer. These achievements were a fit conclusion for the remarkable record of the Tulane Track Team, 1912.

Drags

Did you see "Mink" Heard standing behind his T in the Junior Medical Class picture? "Pinkey" Grehan wanted the Sophomore Academic picture printed in color so that his golden locks would have their just prominence.

Did you ever see Booth catch? No? Well, neither have we, though we have often seen him with mitt and mask.

Have you heard about "Pat" Murphy's visit to the Era Club Meeting? They called him the "dear little boy" and were about to kiss him when "Pat" made a bolt for the door. The ward bosses "Buck" and "Pete."

Who was it who called our weekly paper the Tulane W-E-A-K-L-Y?

If you don't believe us when we tell you that "Pete" Charbonnet is good looking, ask him.

Do not get disgusted and throw the book down simply because the Tulane Seniors are bad looking. There is beauty in the book and if you will but have patience enough, you will find it behind the Newcomb title page. Do they not look sweet, kind and affectionate?—But "all is not gold that glitters." If your Jambalaya looks tired and weary, some of these very beauties are the cause.

Did you hear that "touching" song rendered by our Glee Club on their trip through Louisiana? It started off like this "Stranded in Alexandria. Raise $200.00 and deposit at Texas and Pacific ticket office for the love of old Tulane and Mike."

Poor, poor John Jacob, we sympathize. But somebody had to suffer. Just a little advice—beware of Newcomb, or they will surely get you.

"Do not jump at conclusions." If your picture isn't good looking, don't say naughty things about the photographers, engravers, printers and editors before you take an "un-prejudiced" look at yourself in a mirror.

Poor "Chick" Bres. No wonder that he is small. Old "Pop" has threatened to hit him in the head with an axe so often that he has been scared out of ten years growth.

We intended to run pictures of the whole faculty, but couldn't find a photographer who would take a chance with his camera.

Be sure and get that new book—"How much I know about Parliamentary Procedure," by Stanley M. Lazarus.

Did you notice "Pedro" Miller, John Devlin and "Skinny" White consoling one another. It happened about the first of March.

We have learned with deep regret that T. Baker Smith will graduate this year. Another old landmark gone. If this keeps up, some of our older alumni will not recognize Tulane when they pay us a visit.

What we felt like saying as a Foreword:—We have worked like h— on this book and we hope you d— critics will appreciate it. We know it is good.

Tulane Yells and Songs

BY A STUDENT AFTER A VICTORY OVER L. S. U.
Now get in line somebody said,
And take a drink, or I'll break your head.
Here's to L. S. U., they feel like—well,
Just cheer up fellows, there ain't no hell.
Now a hullabaloo! hooray! hooray!
We'll paint this burg fore break o' day.

Hail Alma Mater, to you, O glorious Tulane,
To show that we're true blue a few more mugs we'll drain.
A few more drinks to go around
Here's to old Tulane, drink 'er down, drink 'er down.
And to our glory, may it never wane,
Now fifteen rahs! for dear Tulane.

The Emergency Glee Club's Concert

ELLO!"—"Hello!"—"Headquarters of the Tulane Glee Club?"—"What?" "Oh!"—"Sure! Headquarters of anything when a voice like that makes the inquiry"—"Stop such nonsense, and listen." "That's pure sense, and I've been listening for several minutes for what you have to say." "Can the Glee Club come to Newcomb and give a little concert tonight?"—"To Newcomb!" "Oh Yes! I see!" "You say they are having a small party in the Gym and if the Glee Club performs unusually well there is a chance for a turkey trot?"—"Well I guess the Glee Club will come—just as fast as we can get there!"—"See you later,"—Good-bye!"—"Say! there!"—"Hello!"—"Hello!"—"That you?"—"Well, may I have the first dance?"—"What?"—"How was that?"—"Hello!"—"Darn the luck!—She rang off."

"What's all that stuff, Doc?" "What the duece were you talking about?" "Who in blazes was that calling up here this time of night?—it's eleven o'clock."

"Don't everybody talk at once, and I'll let you in—before we go any further, tho', who wants to join the Emergency Glee Club?"

"Aw, what are you drivin' at?"—"I do, if there's anything to eat in it."—"What's the joke?"—"You nut, we can't even call cows decently when our voices are in trim—and we just came from the Alabama football game."—"What's Newcomb got to do with it?"

"Everybody get your hats, and come on—I'll explain on the way. We're going to Newcomb—however, lest disquieting complications arise, I do hereby secure you applications to join, and having considered same, do declare you full members of the Tulane Glee Club. You can't sing? Well, don't I know you can't sing. Nobody ever thought you could!—This isn't any serenading party, you bonehead, we're going to have a dance. I'm glad it's finally soaked into your cranium what's going to happen. Call it a crazy expedition, do you? Don't be so blamed pessimistic! Anyhow, where's your gallantry? If the ladies want a Glee Club, it's up to us to furnish one!—If the Lord didn't make our voices for singing purposes, we'll just do the best we can, and trust to luck!"

"There they are in the Gym."—"Some of them looking out."—"How's your voice feeling?" "Not much—believe I can dance better than I can sing."—"Cut out that noise, and come along, you Glee Club!"

"Yes Mam!" "How are you; Mrs. Boman?" "You know these fellows?" "Yes'm, you have heard all of them in the concerts we have given here"—"The fat one?—Oh, that's Mr. Recent, father—He's married now." "Was a member of the E. G. C. last year, and just happened to be at the Club Rooms when the young ladies rang up." "Why, how do you do, Miss Hunn?" "And Miss Eromle." "Glad to see you, Miss Remob!"

(364)

"Girls!" "Girls!" "November!" "Miss Pink!" "Yes, Mrs. Boman—We were merely saying good evening—Surely we may be civil—."

"They're all right, Mrs. Boman—I've been managing that Glee Club for three years now—And they love to sing so well they'll leave those girls in a few seconds, and start off by themselves—Excuse me a moment please, I'll lead them—"

"Well, Doc, start the music"—"Let's get busy." "We came to sing—how about it?"

"Oh let up!—We can't sing with that girl playing another tune on the piano—And I hope none of you are ungentlemanly enough to ask her to stop—We'll dance a little, while we wait, eh, Fellow Members of the E. G. C?" "How about that dance you promised me, Miss Eromle?"

"Is this one mine?"—"I promised you the seventh—this is only the sixth—I have this with Mr.—Oh, what's his name? The fat one?" "Is he married, sure enough?—You can have this one, then. Oh goodness, here comes Mrs. Boman. Tell her something, or we'll be in trouble. "You all will just have to sing something!"

"Yes, Mrs. Boman, we were only waiting for the piano to stop—We sing better without accompaniment"—"You'll stop the music? Don't do that!" "You want to hear us sing? All right, mam—Old Black Joe—That's our favorite."

"Come on now fellows—Got to do something to satisfy her, or the dance'll break up. What, don't know the words?—That don't matter—Just harmonize!—Now—."

"Gone are the days—"

"Oh Lord! If you don't stop trying to sing tenor they'll put us out—" "When my heart was young and gay—"

"Better switch off into 'Evaline,' fellows—we can get that better—and end up with nine Raahs! for Newcomb."

"Rah, Rah, Rah!

"Rah, Rah, Rah!

"Rah, Rah, Rah—Newcomb!" (Fervent applause).

"Thank you, Mrs. Boman—We are certainly glad you thought it sweet. Shall we sing another? No? Have some refreshments? Thank you!"

"Yes, young gentlemen, it is past twelve"—"It's only eleven-thirty, Mrs. Boman, we may sing some more, may we not?" "Good night, young gentlemen"—"But, Mrs. Boman"—"Good night, young gentlemen."

Later—"Well Doc, that was a pretty fine concert, don't you think?"

"Pretty fine, under the circs!"

"Yes, I liked it all right, but that ice cream tasted like somebody had dropped a bar of soap in it!"

Special Notice—Concerts given on three minutes' notice by the Emergency Glee Club.

“A Mint-Bed Romance”

By “Weedie Patton.”

WELVE miles northeast of Charlottesville, in the County of Albemarle, Virginia, set between parallel ranges of rolling hills and within an hour's walk of the massive Blue Ridge lay the plantation of Castle Hill. “Stood” does not express it; Castle Hill merely “lay.” In the old days before the war nobody in Albermarle would have ever dreamt of describing Castle Hill as “lying” anywhere, but times have changed since then and Castle Hill is but one of the many old plantations, which form a picture of decaying magnificence that nevertheless gives the traveler a strong impression of past glory. And of generous, Southern magnificence Castle Hill had plenty, as was attested by its scattered negro cabins, rolling terrace, and lofty locusts, centered about a large, rambling mansion with broad, front steps and capacious veranda.

Castle Hill was, then, not at all unusual, unless it was that the hedge was a little more rugged, the grass a shade longer, and the out-houses, including a huge, red barn, a trifle shabbier than those of the surrounding estates.

Here it was that the Hicksons had lived, generation after generation; it was here that James Hickson, crossing in 1683 had settled; and it was to this same old mansion that he had, a few years later, brought his young wife—in exchange for many pounds of his best tobacco.

The present James Hickson, or the Colonel, as he was better known, was the eldest son of the eldest son of goodness knows how many James Hicksons, for the name had never once left the family.

This last James Hickson had met with such unusual success in his intensive tobacco-culture that his once broad and fertile acres, which incidentally had never supported anything but tobacco since the year 1683, were now well-nigh exhausted. It is true that before the death of the latest Mrs. Hickson there had always been a large and well-kept garden, not to mention the capacious mint-bed, the peculiar property of the Colonel; but the mint-bed had perceptibly increased until now it vied in area with the garden which had dwindled to a tiny patch suited to the needs of the Colonel, his daughter, and three or four negro servants.

Now you must know that the Colonel was ex-manager of Castle Hill. The ruling power was Dorothy. It was Dorothy who had upon Mrs. Hickson's death calmly stepped into her mother's shoes and taken the helm in spite of the Colonel, who swore by the Established Church, the tobacco trade, and other equally firm institutions that he would sooner see himself in the infernal regions, which please God he hoped never to behold, than allow the management of Castle Hill to fall into the hands of a woman. These sentiments he had repeated over his morning julep till he had learned them by heart, when finding that they had no effect upon Dorothy's determination to rule unquestioned, his wrath subsided as suddenly as it had arisen—which was a way with the Colonel.

There was only one thing to mar Dorothy's happiness. The Colonel drank. It was not the three-a-day juleps—one after each meal—that she objected to. She expected that. Nor was she seriously distressed over the Colonel's established custom of getting desperately drunk Christmas and New Year's, although the effects of Christmas lasted well over to New Year's, and, as for the effects of New Year's—well, they lasted almost to Christmas again. This she accepted as merely a necessary evil; but the shock of his wife's death had launched the Colonel into an almost habitual state of semi-drunkenness, not to mention his adding Easter, All Saints' Day, and Thanksgiving, together with many other less important holidays, to the Christmas and New Year's celebrations.

But it was not until the fall of 1908 that things began to grow really serious. Dorothy had had an unusual successful year with the farm. She had broken the law of the Medes and Persians and put in three acres of oats on land that, since its clearing, had been slave to the insistent tobacco. The exhausted soil had responded nobly and Dorothy's heart swelled with the success of the venture.

The Colonel had long ago given up all interest in the farm. He wanted only two things, Dorothy and his juleps, and poor little Dorothy was beginning to fear that the order of preference was being reversed. Doctor Gordon had told the Colonel, the last time he was in a condition to be told anything, which by this time was going on two months, that, unless he cut down his juleps either in number or size he was in danger of delirium tremens and of eventually losing his mind. Whereupon the Colonel swore at Doctor Gordon and explained with unnecessary vehemence that, being a gentleman, it was for him and him only to determine the daily number of his juleps; that Tom, his negro body-servant, had made all his juleps an orthodox size for forty years and would probably continue to do so for at least fifteen more. He added that he hoped the Doctor would have a good drive home, and that next time he was called to Castle Hill by a woman's tale—the Colonel was still sharp enough to know that Dorothy was to blame for the visit—he would exert his judgment more and save himself the trouble of such a long trip.

In reply to his sally the doctor, with difficulty controlling his temper, remarked that the Colonel need never fear another visit on his account, and also that if the Colonel continued to rely on his judgment as a gentleman to regulate his daily number of drinks, on Tom's judgment as to their size, and succeeded in living fifteen years longer in spite of these conditions, he, the doctor, would see that the Colonel got a good position in a museum. With this final shot, he stalked down the steps, refusing the Colonel's proffered assistance, who even in his wrath could not refuse hospitality to a guest, stored his valise in the back of his buggy, and with a short "good-evening," whirled down the driveway and through the ever-open gate.

The Colonel slowly made his way up the front steps, ordered an extra strong mint julep and relapsed again into his customary condition. But the words of the doctor had sunk deep, and try as he might, he could not altogether forget his warning.

Well, as I said before it was now almost two months since the doctor's visit and things had been going on from bad to worse. To crown poor little Dorothy's misfortunes, the Colonel daily deserted his own home for the more congenial atmosphere of the Albemarle Hunting Club. Here surrounded by his friends he whiled away the afternoon with Tom's juleps and his own stories of the war—stories in which he always figured as the same gallant young Captain skirmishing about the state, gathering information here, delaying Federal provisions there, and always thinking of Lizzie—his Lizzie, dead now some twenty years. It was in the midst of these stirring accounts and then only when the broken, nerve-racked, old fellow took on some semblance of his old sparkle and dash.

On this particular day—the third of March, if I remember correctly—the Colonel returned to Castle Hill with the faithful Tom by his side, steadying him and guiding both his own horse and that of his master. Tom, thinking to spare Dorothy the sight of the old man who was unusually drunk, brought the horses round to the back entrance and, after assisting the Colonel to alight, led him to his easy chair in the library and repaired to the stables.

For a long while the Colonel sat musing, his vacant stare fixed on the flaming log in the huge fire-place before him. He heard Aunt Sophie, Tom's buxom wife, bustling about the kitchen stove preparing the evening meal. Outside, Juno, his old pointer, was playing with the litter of six tiny puppies and their occasional little yaps mingling with the soft, contented sound that well-fed hens make on a spring afternoon formed a soul-satisfying symphony that lulled his tired mind.

Suddenly he was startled by the click of the parlor door closing just down the hall. There followed the soft cadence of Dorothy's voice in conversation with a guest; Miss Lottie Jackson, the Colonel thought to himself, come to see about the weekly supply of honey.

Almost immediately there fell upon his ears the heavier tones of a man's voice. The Colonel smiled. It was Jack Taylor, dear old Jack. The Colonel could scarcely remember the time when Jack had not been playing on the front steps with Dorothy. He could hear again their childish chatter interrupted now and then, by the boisterous, boyish laughter and by mild lectures on behavior in the sweeter tones of the girl. It seemed but yesterday that Captain Taylor, who had died years ago of pneumonia, had come over to apologize to the Colonel for the damage done to Castle Hill crops by the Captain's hogs and upon their discovering that the invaders had come through a hole in the fence made by Jack, for the purpose of facilitating his hourly visits, the Colonel had said "damn the crops," and had laughingly commanded one of his negroes to make a little gate for Jack and Dorothy.

But now, as the voices outside the door neared his end of the hall, becoming more and more distinct the Colonel was roused from his reverie by Dorothy's tones.

"It isn't that Jack," she was saying, "it isn't that at all. It's not that I object to papa's taking his juleps after his meals, but you know how he's getting to drink. It's terrible, and Doctor Gordon won't come to help him any. He says it doesn't do any good; papa won't mind him."

"Well, can't Doctor Gordon scare the Colonel into letting up a little?" came the response.

"No, he says he told papa he was in danger of getting some terrible thing, and—maybe—losing—his mind. And he says he didn't say it just to scare papa; he says that's—just what—will happen." Her voice trailed off weakly and of a sudden there fell on the old Colonel's ears a heart-rending sob.

"Oh Jack, can't you do anything for him?"

"There! there!" he heard the boy murmur comfortingly, "don't you break your poor little heart over this, darling. I'll take the Colonel in hand, myself, if need be. I'll guarantee we'll fix him up all right."

Slowly the look of trouble faded from the Colonel's face; his cheeks turned scarlet; his bleared eyes glinted angrily. With an effort he raised himself from his chair and stood uncertainly.

Again the voice of the young man came to his ears, and this time it held an entirely new note.

"Dot," it said, "if—if I succeed in reforming the dear old fellow, would you—could you—"

The Colonel's hesitating air vanished. He staggered towards the hall in a blaze of fury. Throwing open the door, he glared into the fading light.

Through the high, stained-glass transom of the dim old hall, and down between the tall, sober portraits of the Hickson dead, shot a long, mellow shaft of rose-tinted light—a farewell benediction of the setting sun; and bathed in its warm embrace stood two figures. Slowly the girl lifted her face to the devouring eyes of him who held her and for one, long moment their lips met. With a cry of rage the old man rushed towards the pair.

"You young puppy!" he cried in a blind fury, "you ungrateful young puppy, get out of this house. If ever I see you—," he choked, then burst out wrathfully. "Reform the dear old fellow, would you?" He flung open the massive, oak door, letting in a flood of crimson light; then, turning upon Jack, his face scarlet with rage and reflecting the brilliant light of the sinking sun. "Get out of here," he roared.

Slowly the color left the younger man's face. He relinquished Dorothy, who was by now thoroughly frightened and white as a sheet. He was evidently striving to regain control of himself. At last, with apparent effort at calm, he began.

"Colonel," he said, "you are—"

"Not a word!" screamed the old fellow, who had now worked himself into a perfect rage, "Not a word! Get out of this house, or—by heaven, I'll have you put out."

The color flooded Jack's face. He bit his lips hard. Without a word he turned and strode swiftly down the steps, across the yard and, not once turning, vaulted the low fence and was lost to view.

A week passed without a change in the old man's habits. Every day he and Tom rode over to the Club, only to return near night-fall with the Colonel hopelessly drunk.

It was on the afternoon of the twelfth that, after an unusually disagreeable morning, the old man repaired in low spirits to his usual place at the Club. Here with Cap'n Turner and a couple of younger men he fell to with a zest. He was on his fifth drink when Jack Taylor came into the room. There was a momentary pause of surprise throughout the hall, for, though Taylor was a Club member, he had never frequented the bar. He pulled up a chair at the Colonel's table and ordered a julep. When the waiter returned, he shoved it across the table to the Colonel, who was now too far gone to remember their recent quarrel. The old man, warming to such hospitality, began one of his interminable war stories.

The evening wore on; the occupants of the bar began one by one to order their horses for the home ride. Finally, no one was left but the Colonel, Jack, the Cap'n and Ed Hammond, one of Jack's most intimate friends. Even the barkeep had gone into the pool room for a game with the waiter. The Cap'n was softly snoring.

Suddenly Ed reached under the table, and, unnoticed by the Colonel made a soft, scratching sound on one of the wooden legs. Through the open door opposite the Colonel stepped an enormous, black cat. Its tail was erect and slowly waving and its motionless green eyes fixed on the group at the table.

The Colonel stared, a little startled, at the animal as it glided silently on. Now the unusual size of this particular cat was enough to astonish a sober man, and the Colonel was far from sober. Quickly, his mind reverted to the doctor's threat. Was he seeing things? He would find out.

"What a large cat," the Colonel remarked with superb indifference. He was watching Jack's face narrowly. But Jack was prepared.

"I don't see any cat," he replied in the same tone and following the Colonel's eyes. The Colonel's face paled slightly. Maybe they were fooling him.

"You don't see any cat! Why right there," and he pointed at the animal in question. Was it after all an apparition?

"There's no cat there," repeated Jack, apparently much puzzled.

"Ed, do you see anything?" Ed slowly shook his head. The Colonel was plainly alarmed now.

"Jack," said he earnestly, "do you mean that there's no cat there?" And he pointed with shaking finger.

"I mean," said Jack slowly, and emphasizing each word, "that there's no cat in this room.

The Colonel rose. His face was the color of paste. "Tom," he called. He stared at the black specter, who was now gazing straight in his eyes. A shudder passed through his whole frame. With a visible effort he pulled himself together. At least the boys should not know of his condition. A painfully forced smile spread over his face. With fine carelessness he glanced back at the two younger men.

"Boys," said the Colonel, "I was jus' tryin' to fool you. I didn't see any cat." Leaning heavily on Tom, he passed forth into the cool, night air.

Jack smiled at Ed. Then, snatching pen and paper from a near-by table, he wrote swiftly. Sealing the message, he ran down the steps and out to the stables. Tom was getting the horses.

"Tom," said Jack, "you get this note to Miss Dorothy soon as you can, hear? I'll bring the Colonel home tonight."

"Yassuh!" said Tom.

That evening Dorothy met Tom at the door. When she saw he was alone and had glanced at the piece of paper in his hand, her face blanched.

"What is it, Tom?" she asked quickly.

"Jes' dis yer note ah got fo'm Marse Jack," said he reassuringly, "Marse Jack say he bring de Cunnel."

This was what Dorothy read:

"Have kept my promise. Have reformed the dear old fellow. Fix us some supper. Jack."

The Hickson's and the Taylor's plantation are one now—still under the old name, Castle Hill. But Castle Hill "stands" now. The old mansion looks as firm and immovable as the Blue Ridge behind it. And the terraces are a little smoother, the hedge a bit more even, the grass a shade shorter, and the out-houses, including a huge red barn, a trifle trimmer than those of the surrounding estates.

As for the farming—well, the originator of Dorothy's oat crop idea is a permanent fixture at Castle Hill now and there's not a tobacco leaf on the whole six hundred acres. The mint-bed is gone, too. The Colonel says he doesn't believe in mint-beds. And James Hickson Taylor, now going on four, has a yard of the finest Bantams you ever saw, right in that very spot.

Uncle Tom said, the other day, that "he 'spicioned Marse Jeemes' Bantams gwin win all de prizes ober dem gre't big Black Orpin'tons what Docta' Go'don got.

Candles and Faith

SO you wish that I go now, Tante Jeanne?" scarcely seeing the nodded assent, the girl continued—"I think maybe Sainte Antoine does not wish that you get married."

The hair on the woman's head did not rise; every strand was too well disciplined.

"Mon Dieu! Angelique Dandridge, 'ave you no faith? Is it because I have burned candles for twenty years that you think no man will come! It is because—"

"Cheer Tante Jeanne—he will come, I am sure he will come if le Bon Dieu wills that he should, but if he could come faster—a little faster—it would be nicer, maybe."

The woman—what shall I say?—she did not soften. Jeanne La Farge's angular contour and adamant soul defied the term. She could not melt; the nearest she did was to relax ever so slightly, some where within.

"Ah! me, I 'ave faith, 'E will come. 'E will come if I pray with the strength of my soul, and if the candles are made to burn before the altar of Saint Antoine—"

"It is the candles, Pere Rochaud, that I have come, s'il vous plait."

The old priest smiled, as every one smiled upon Angelique Dandridge, and there was a perplexed look in his kind eyes as he watched her follow the worn path which led to the little church. For twelve years, almost without fail, she had come to him on the Friday of every week—"it was for the candles," she would say. At first she could only lisp her request—she was very young—and the timid little figure disappearing into the door at the end of the path, had changed almost before his eyes, he was thinking, into a girlishly slight child—woman, with a long braid, unbraided now, and coiled at the nape of the slender neck. And he could remember farther back than twelve years, another woman had come as often on the same mission—another figure that had walked as regularly down the path. There had been a difference between the two. The other woman had been Jeanne La Farge.

"There is something" he murmured to himself—"something that has been wrong or lacking in that family for twenty years. And yet, there are only two of them, Miss Jeanne and the little girl." And the gentle old curate would have opened his eyes very wide, indeed, if he could have heard his more worldly-wise flock whisper that that was precisely what was the matter. There was only two of them, and Jeanne La Farge wanted a third, in the shape of a husband. Twenty years before when the pretty young sister of Jeanne La Farge kissed her good-bye and went away with the "handsome American," the older woman wandered in silent chagrin why it had not been she. But the tall angular form, and the straight hair and small eyes, had been no match for the dimpled softness, and shadowy eyes, and bewitching smiles and curls of little "Toinette."

"It is true," thought the elder La Farge, "that she is very pretty, and charming—oui, tres charmante—but she is too frivolous to consider marriage now—she is too young; and me, I am twenty-three, sensible, firm, steady—I would make a man a good wife—et encore, il n'y a pas beau-coup-de temps." It was at this time that she bought her first candles, to beseech the good Saint to hear her prayer and speed some deserving man to the haven of her scanty arms and maidenly virtues. Not that she deemed herself bordering upon spinster-hood—far be it from Jeanne La Farge. One need not think one was hard pressed until thirty, but then it was as well to begin in time. So she betook herself to Pere Rochaud on the Friday of every week—and every week was the straight hair of Jeanne La Farge slicked, and patted, and pressed into severer flatness; and every day of every week did the eyes of Jeanne La Farge grow smaller and more piercing, and every day of every week did the figure of Jeanne La Farge grow more angular and more slim. When she walked for one year in the dreaded realm of undeniable spinsterhood—when thirty-one years were telling on the eyes, and hair, and form of Jeanne La Farge, in a way more revealing than with most women, Angelique Dandridge came to live with her. 'Toinette was dead.

The child was fairer than her mother had been, and there was a fire in the gold of her hair that glowed like her father's, but the dimples, the deep shadowy eyes, and the curls were 'Toinette's.

Jeanne La Farge's eyes were not common place when she looked at her niece—there was something different in the depths of them that seemed to say—"can it be? The child of the child 'Toinette.'" They were not unprepossessing eyes to look upon then, as the soul of the woman looked out through them at the child that had been denied her.

And Angelique had been sent for the candles, then, on the Friday of every week—and Angelique had been told what her Tante Jeanne was praying for. In the depths of her baby heart there was an earnest and all-compelling desire that her Aunt's prayer might be answered. When her father died unexpectedly four years later, the child was swerved from her purpose in the greatness of her grief—and ever afterward she prayed, as her Aunt had taught her to pray, for the soul of her father, and oftener than she prayed for "Tante Jeanne." She grew up, never having known any life larger than the life of her aunt. She had been taught by her and had been her constant companion. She had no playmates other than the neighbor's children, whom she thought boisterous and noisy.

But the village was watching Angelique Dandridge with interest. "Beautiful" they would ejaculate, as she passed with her aunt on rare occasions. "Such hair, such eyes, such carriage—and such naive unconsciousness! And the ungainly prim old aunt seemed an odd background for such a picture! "Things cannot continue long—someone will find her—and once they have found her—!” and the village would continue its speculations on the old Creole spinster and her beautiful half-American niece.

But men were shadows to the simple soul of the girl, unless, to be sure, one called Pere Rochaud a man! Men were things she had read about—but novels were forbidden fruit, so men were uncomfortable creatures, at best, that twenty years of candles and prayer could not draw to her aunt. Men were things connected with her aunt, in her mind. Something her aunt wanted. That anyone else should possess them had never occurred to her—and it would have astounded the very soul of her, if it had been suggested to her that they, the unattainable, had aspirations and desires of their own.

“Angelique, Angelique! Non ange! Il est arrive—L’hommele Sainte Antonine has answered my prayer!” And there was a look in the eyes of Jeanne La Farge of a Caesar who has conquered a Rome.

“Il est arrive! Il est arrive?” But there was dullness in the voice as it repeated the words, as though the girl could not quite comprehend—

“Oui, our, M! Oh, Angelique, le Bon Dieu is good. “Faith, faith is wonderful! I knew he would come.’ Ow is it the Bible says, “If ye have faith as a grain of mustard seed ?”

But the crunching sound on the gravel walk, and the step on the small gallery, caused the woman to stop suddenly, smooth her hair and collar, and the girl to turn quickly and stare in the direction of the door.

The expression of the tanned young face of James Farwell was so plainly one of mingled astonishment and admiration as he met the steady gaze of the beautiful eyes of Angelique, that Jeanne La Farge hastened to extend a thin hand, and to assure him that “’e ’ad not made a mistake. This was the home of Miss Jeanne La Farge—’is room was quite ready, if ’e desired.”

The young man did so desire, and if closed doors revealed faces and thoughts within rooms, Jeanne La Farge would not quite have understood.

“Et, mon chere,” Jeanne La Farge was saying, “I gave ’im your room, because I thought I must. It is the only one, and besides he does not know. I ’ave taken your things out, and now, chere, you will stay in my room, if you do not care, eh?”

“Oui, oui, n’ importe,” Angelique nodded absently, and then—“Mais, Tante Jeanne, he is so different. He is not fat nor wrinkled like Pere Rochaud,” she paused, and then continued, a trifle wistfully, perhaps—

“He is so young, so young. Tante Jeanne, do you think perhaps he is very, very young. I did not think he would.”

“Mon enfant,” the woman interrupted—“We must take what le Bon Dieu sends us. ’E seems quite young, to me, aussi. Perhaps—mais non—I cannot, as your father would ’ave said ’fly in the face of providence.’ I do not like to say I am disappointed, a little.

Non, I will say that I am very thankful to le Bon Dieu, and that since it is 'Is will that 'e is the Man, 'e will do very well for me!"

James Farwell was the son of a man who believed that the son's possessing the knowledge of how to make money, was the necessary step preceeding his possessing the money his father had made for him; and since his son had a literary turn, it was natural he should become a magazine writer, and it was also natural, that, when in quest of local color, he should stumble upon the little buried village of Willowfield. Arrived there, he wondered what disposition he could make of his material self, after his daily baths in local color were over, and when his strong sunburned American body demanded food. Some fate prompted him to ask a comfortable looking middle-aged lady—who was no other than Mrs. Garrulus, with strong match-making tendencies—if she could recommend a boarding place. Having married off her own progeny. "Here" thought she, "is the Prince Charming to awaken the soul of Anglique Dandridge." So she carefully pointed out the little grey house, and smiled as she saw his strong lithe young figure disappear in that direction. He had been set at the door by a rather queer type of woman, he thought—surprised, absent, prim, stiff, and yet nervously gushing. "She 'ad this one room, with a bath at the side. It was not quite ready then. Would 'e return, eh bien!" "Splendid new type!" he thought. But when, an hour later, he found himself looking into the wonderfully deep and brown eyes of Anglique Dandridge, he did not think of types, just then.

That evening there was not the deep satisfaction in Jeanne La Farge's soul that she had expected the presence of a man at her table to produce. Something troubled her. "Oh! yes, it was nice to hear a man's deep voice, and 'ave 'im quite one of the family, but there was something" Afterward, when the three were sitting together on the little vine-covered gallery, the older woman did not send Anglique to bed, as she had planned to do, if "the man" ever came. Instead, Anglique was sitting on the stoop, her head thrown back against one of the grey posts, with the moonlight lighting her radiant hair and deepening the shadows that hid the unawakened soul in the dark eyes.

"Lord!" thought the man, "to find her, here!"

"Ah!" thought the woman, "I 'ad 'ardly noticed it before, she is very beautiful—Anglique."

As the days went by, James Farwell grew to like the quaint Creole woman of the ignored "h's" and spinster ways—and the girl—he did not dare define to himself just how he felt toward her, so neither shall I. It was sufficient that her hair was glowing warm gold fire, her neck wonderfully white and curved, and her eyes—her eyes—but that was sufficient.

And Jeanne La Farge realized that her niece was eighteen and very, very beautiful, and that she was the child of Toinette. And she also realized that men, at any rate,

(279)

James Farwell had such an untidy way of getting things out of place and lumbering up rooms, and that neatness to her was life.

And Angelique realized that she did not think Sainte Antoine had sent James Farwell to her Tante La Farge.

"Angelique," (he had called her 'Miss Dandridge' one day, and she had said simply, "I am Angelique.") "Angelique, have you ever read much?" he asked, in the tone he used with women, as they sat on the steps one evening waiting for the supper bell.

"Me? yes, I have read geographies, and histories, and 'The Lives of Saints' and—"

There was something in his laugh that made Angelique look up, startled, and there was something he said that she did not understand. The next day he gave her four pages from a magazine, telling her to read them.

"Why?" she asked.

"Because I want you to."

She looked them over without hesitation.

"Eh bien!" she said gravely, then quickly. "But there is no reason why I should. Besides, my aunt, she perhaps would not like that I read them."

"I have asked her," he said smilingly, "and she says you may."

A few hours before, he had asked Jeanne La Farge if she would read a story he had written, and then tell him if he might give it to Angelique. She did, and there was a strange note in her voice as she handed the loose leaves back to him, and said, more to herself than to him—

"I think you are right—it is time she should know something of life and love. I have forgotten that she is eighteen and the child of 'Toinette.'"

"I do not understand what it means," said Angelique simply. "It is very pretty—I do not see how you could have written it so well. But me, I am afraid I am too stupid to understand."

The man's face was a study just then. What he wanted to say was, "You adorable, wonderful Angelique Dandridge!" What he did say was, "Shall I try to explain?"

And for an hour Jeanne La Farge saw the two sitting there—James Farwell talking earnestly, with a look in his eyes that even she could not mistake. And in the lovely face of the girl, she saw swiftly changing perplexity, doubt, acceptance, and then finally something like understanding.

"Oui," she heard her say finally, "I think I understand. He liked her because he couldn't do anything else. He couldn't help it, even if he wanted to."

"Not even if he wanted to," repeated the man softly.

"And it was funny that she looked like me."

"No, it was not funny that she looked like you," he said smilingly, the smile that belonged alone to James Farwell, and the father of James Farwell.

"And he, what is it you say? He loved her—"

"Yes, he loves her," and the changed consonant was lost upon Angelique.

"Do you wish that I go now for the candles, Tante Jeanne?" asked Angelique, as she had asked every Friday of her life in Willowfield. It was the second Friday after James Farwell's arrival.

"Non, ma chere." If a thunderbolt had fallen at the girl's feet she would not have been more startled.

"Not go for the candles?" and there was a look in her eyes that checked the "I don't want them any more" on the woman's lips, and made her say hastily—perhaps to avoid questioning—

"Oui, oui. The candles, of course, I did not know what I was saying."

Pere Rochaud looked at Angelique Dandridge as one looks at a stranger—only more intently.

"It is the candles, I have come for, Pere Rochaud," and there was something in her eyes that he had never seen before. When he returned he asked gently, "How old are, Angelique."

"Eighteen, Pere." But she could not understand why he asked.

"Why, Pere?" she queried.

"For no reason, my child, only you have changed."

"Changed?"

And she turned and started down the path thoughtfully. Pere Rochaud was called in by the persistent ring of the 'phone that stood on his desk, but he would have liked instead to have watched the girl.

There was a stone lying in the middle of the path that Angelique did not see, and as she stumbled, she tried to regain her balance and fell. As she attempted to rise, the pain in her ankle made her wince, and everything grew dim and wavering, as she sank down, very pale.

It was several minutes after James Farwell had gathered up the still little heap, very gently, and had brought it home to Jeanne La Farge, that the child of 'Toinette opened her eyes.

"My candles!" she murmured.

"Candles?" he asked with something in his voice that made the girl feel that pain was not pain just then. "What candles, Angelique?"

A hot wave swept from her neck, over her pale cheeks to her forehead, and was lost in the gold of her hair.

She could not tell him "What candles," and so she did not answer. And James Farwell thought he had never seen her so beautiful as in that moment of unaccountable confusion.

"Do you remember the story of the man who loved the girl because he couldn't help it, Angelique?"

"Yes"—then curiously—"Suppose he had wanted to help it, poor man?"

"He doesn't."

"He doesn't? Is he alive?"

"Yes—no—he didn't, I mean"—then savagely—"No, he doesn't—right now—I love you, Angelique.

"No, no," she cried, but a sharp twinge of pain made her reach for the man's hand as simply and instinctively as, years before, she would have reached for her mother's.

He never knew whether it was because of the sobs and the face buried in the pillow, or of the intoxication of the moment, that he could not quite understand what she meant, as she said brokenly.

"O, Sainte Antoine! It is all a mistake! It was for my Tante Jeanne that I was burning those candles. You have us mixed up I think. But, Sainte Antoine, if you don't mind, he loves me now, and I love him. He is so young—so young. Can't you get another man for Tante Jeanne?"

Seek and Ye Shall Find

WELL, George, you could have knocked me down with a feather when I sighted you in Canal Street this morning! It's been nine years, now, since we saw each other, hasn't it?"

"Yep. Last time I ran across you was when I blew through Charleston. Say, but you have a great town, Alf! What's that building across the way, there?"

"That? Oh that's Tulane University—Gibson Hall. There's a deal of it back of that, too. Handsome building, isn't it?"

"You bet! I've seen 'em all over the country and in Canada too, but it'd be a hard job to find a handsomer or more finely located college hall than that. Say, Alf, what might that be on the right, that red, monostic pile?"

"Oh, those are Tulane domotories. And do you see that structure just above the Library Building?"

"That I do! An elegant building! Swell residence, I suppose?"

"Not a bit of it! That's where the fellows grub between refectory hours—built in competition with Del's, across the park. Pity the Library's closed today! You ought not to shake away from town without paying your respects to its revered keeper, Miss Bell. Say, George, are you much of a walker?"

"You bet. Fact is, that's one of my reasons for wanting to hang here for a week. I'm in a bad way through lack of exercise."

"Well, we shall keep on, then. There's a road a little farther up that is well worth a walk. Old fellow, when are we going to say good-bye to the single life? You ought to be as strong for the ladies as ever."

"I am, Alf, but—huh, I don't know—I suppose the fault's all with me, but somehow I can't bring myself to be tied down to one girl. Too much generosity, or a case of overstuck on one's self?"

"Neither. Georgie, old boy, all you lack is an introduction to the New Orleans girls."

"Say, fellow, singular thing, but you've hit closer home there than you thought. It may be foolish, but, do you know, Alf, there's a girl I see right now with my mind's eye—I can't call her an ideal, as an ideal woman is the last thing on earth I could tolerate. Give me flesh and blood, give me rationality before everything else! Nor is she a dream-girl—the very word would be a slam on her. I don't remember when her face was first made visible to my mind's eye, but I can picture her as plainly as though I had seen her every day of my life. She is too much of a real being, too human to grant me the right to scoff at the vision as an empty conceit. For some reason I have fixed her abode in Louisiana and have given her a name that is as surely established in my consciousness as my name itself. I have called her Gervaise de la Croix and can see her as plainly as the day. She is not beautiful, nor even a woman to please the majority; and I can't tell but that even she strikes only responsiveness in me, not love."

"Well, George, you are not the first man who has chosen Louisiana for the seat of his dreams. Romance is wrought into the very fabric of the life of this old state. And, you know, human nature's the same the world over. Doubtless you are not the only man who has visualized and made real his Gervaise, though, I must say, the sureness with which you have established her identity is singular. To change the subject, did you know _____?"

"Say, Alf, d'you see that old oak over on the left?"

"Yes."

"Well, let's cut across to it by the shell road just ahead. I'm anxious to get some of the moss."

"Come on! Strange it hadn't occurred to me to suggest that to you. You never see oaks like these in Carolina, do you?"

"I must admit, we don't. Neither have we your mud."

"No, that you don't. But don't trouble yourself. We wouldn't give a parish of our mud for your whole sandy state."

"Go to it, Alf! But here we are. Say, what's this? An old vault, out of plumb and half sunk! Let's read the inscription. Ha! in French—'Gervaise La Croix!' Née le 19 Avril, 1802, morte le 25 Septembre, 1820, Requiescat—!"

"Died of the fever, I suppose. Behold, George! the fate of all ideals. Now say Bettie Kavanaugh back in Columbia won't get a proposal in two weeks' time!"

A True Country Episode

MISS Lilah say she's sorry de roads is too bad-like fo' de carriage an' she hopes as de Missus' won't mind de waggin." This was addrsed to two attractive girls who had just alighted at the country station from a north-bound train. They were to be Mrs. Merritt's guests for the coming week, guests of "Miss Lilah," in whose family Uncle William had served since "befo' de war."

"Of course not, Uncle William, the wagon ride will be delightful." It was Belle who answered the old darcy, and as she and Sally followed him to the wagon, inquired about Mrs. Merritt.

After seeing that the girls were as comfortable as they could be in a wagon, Uncle William took his place on the front seat, started the horses off and began to whistle. The two girls on a seat behind him wondered what the young minister looked like. He had just arrived two weeks before and was the only attraction of the little village. Besides, he was staying at the very house where they were going to visit.

Presently, a handsome young man in a gray riding suit passed on horseback, and tipped his hat as all county people do. "That must be the minister," whispered Belle.

For a time they compared his looks with their ideals, while Uncle William on the front seat whistled on.

Their conversation drifted on, becoming more and more confidential until Sally said, "How about your Prince Charming, Belle? Don't you feel like telling me about him now? You know you promised to, some day."

"Yes, and I'll keep my promise right this minute. You remember I went to a house-party at Blanche's about two weeks ago. Well, when I got there I found a bunch of jolly girls at the station. Blanche discovered a newspaper passed through the strap of my suit-case and opened it. You can imagine how surprised we all were to find a love letter on the first page. I didn't have a moment's peace during the whole party and have been wondering ever since how the paper got there."

The truth of the matter was that a young man on the train became very much interested in the young lady sitting opposite him, who was no other than Belle. Acting on impulse he wrote a dashing letter on the front page of his newspaper and bribed the porter to put the paper on her suit-case.

"How perfectly adorable!" exclaimed Sally as soon as Belle finished her story. "Have you any idea who wrote it?"

"Why yes, he signed his name. It was—

At that instant the wagon gave a ferocious jerk, the back seat came loose and the girls were thrown heels over head out the back of the wagon.

Uncle William continued to whistle and rode on, totally unconscious that he was now the only occupant of the wagon.

But in a few minutes he stopped short with a troubled expression on his face. Was that a cry he had heard? He turned quickly to see. "Well I'll be ——" was all he could say, for there were the two girls sitting in the mud about fifty yards behind, waving their hands and calling frantically. Slowly gathering his wits, Uncle William finally realized what had happened, all the while approaching the girls.

In the meantime, the ridiculousness of their situation dawned upon Belle and Sally who were screaming with laughter when Uncle William reached them.

"Lordy, chilluns, yo' ain't hurt, is ye? An' de Missus she done tol' me, 'Now, Uncle Willum, yo' jes' take good care o' dem gals.' An' here yo' is a'sitting in de mud an' a'gettin' yo' purty drisses all dirty. I'll fix dat b'y James fo' not hitchin' dat seat on right."

By this time someone more gallant than Uncle William was offering his assistance. The minister who had enjoyed the scene from afar, controlled his laughter long enough to offer to help.

But Uncle William would not hear to it. "Now you jes' leave me alone. I done spill'd dese ladies out o' my waggin and I'se gwine put 'em in agin by meself."

A look of thanks from the girls rewarded the old darcy for dismissing the minister. Belle said she hoped she would never see him again.

When they were well on their way again, Uncle William resumed his whistling.

"Girls, I certainly am sorry this had to happen." It was the kind voice of Miss Lilah, who had met her guests at the steps and on the way into the house heard of their mishap.

"Don't worry, Miss Lilah, it would have been fun if only that horrid old minister hadn't see it all and——"

Belle was interrupted by a laugh from the gallery and a voice saying, "Can't I come in, Miss Merritt?"

In answer she threw open the door: "Dr. James Blackmore, I want you to meet Miss Whitaker and Miss Loreland."

"This gives me great pleasure," he answered with a mischievous smile, and I hope the young ladies have recovered from their fall." There was a decided twinkle in his eye.

Before the girls could answer, Uncle William's voice was heard. We won't repeat what he said, but he was scolding the yard boy for not fastening the wagon seat on securely.

That night Sally and Belle talked over their experience into the wee hours of the morning.

"We must have looked so funny," Sally was saying, "and it all happened in the midst of that exciting tale. You didn't get to tell me the name of your famous admirer."

"No, and I'm not quite so anxious to do it now." Sally's face fell. "But if you promise you won't tell—the letter was signed, James Blackmore."

Legends of Killohass College

YE PROFESSORE

A professore, ther was ful wise and kinde,
Well polished was his face and eek his minde;
Full bright it shone like any looking glass,
Reflecting thus ye brightness of his class.
Square was his nose and eek his gouvernance
And broad his mind as was his countenance.
Ther was upon his scalp no bit of hair
Save one, as for the rest, sooth it was bare.
Verboseness, he condemned and eek redundancy
Yet spake himself with pleasure and abundance.
Whan that he spake, he rubbed, the while, his nose
And fumbled with the buttons of his clothes.
Now we'll pass on for, faith, we know no more
He was a verray perfect professore.

YE PHILOSOPHER

There was also a sage Philosopher
Who did to grammarye nothing prefer.
So rode he to the Sabbath on a broome,
But used it ne'er to sweepen out his roome.
Of bookes, he had ful many by the score
Replete with magic and exploded lore.
'Tis said Diogenes lived in a tubbe,
Our sage would none of this and there's the rubbe.

THE DEBATOUR

A Debatour there was of sad visage
As solemn as a parrot in his cage.
Black was his hat and eek his tie and clothes,
He wore a pair of pince-nez on his nose.
Ful well he spake and eloquently
Sometimes upon his subject, accidently.
Persuasive was his voice and eek his manner
As rousing as ye song, "Star Spangled Banner."
He was as in this discourse doth appear
A dehatour, unique quite without peer.

(387)

YE FOOTBALL PLAYER

There was also a football player rare,
By students all, he was yclept a bear.
A brier pipe was in his mouth ythrust,
Full many a head and leg had he ybust.
Strong were his arms and broad his shoulders twain,
Small was his care and eek thus was his brain.
His hat was flat and narrow was its brim,
Whan that he walked ful many followed him.
Full fair he played and eek with all his might
He was a verray perfect, gentle night.

YE GRIND

There was these too (unhappy night) a grind!
Who was to all but musty books quite blind.
He thought, forsooth, the school, a place to study,
His cheeks, alas, were anything but ruddy.
His nose, faith, was sharp and preposterously long,
His conception of life was teetotally wrong.
Two necks in his collar, I trow, might have entered
Thru goggles, inch-thick were his peerings con-centered.
He would, pardee, a brilliant sage have made
Alas, the fairest blossoms soon must fade.

ATTENTION, MR. COLLEGE MAN

*"Pillows for mine!"
said Herb Hasbrouck
the other night.*

Only one thing under foot is as comfortable as a pillow—that's a pair of Crossett Shoes.

Some day, some one will induce Herb to try Crossetts. Then he'll cut out his pillows and wear Crossetts.
